4/10 · -1 vs last week

Previously: trust began rebuilding — Timan published a verifiable hUSDC recovery list, RocketX re-enabled XRD trading, and the room argued about gateway costs and the missing go-to-market.

A thin, weary week: the main chat was quiet and spam-heavy, but Sunday brought the real story — an angry flare-up over the XRD still held by the former RDX entity. Meanwhile builders quietly shipped: node costs fell, GENKIPOOL's console grew, and a new community video digest launched.

WHAT THE ROOM TALKED ABOUT

hUSDC recovery gets transparent

The first episode of Emma's Radix Weekly walked through the recovery math: 79 accounts are now verifiably owed 360,851 stuck hUSDC, calculated by public code anyone can rerun. Nothing gets paid until Hyperlane releases the collateral — and a question on payout timing went unanswered.

Node and gateway hosting options

NOWNodes dropped Radix from its shared plans, offering only a dedicated node at 900 EUR a month. Daffy countered with progress: mainnet node storage costs are down 40%, and a 'Lean edition' gateway targeting a node plus gateway on one 1 TB disk is coming — but a hosting partner to run it as a service is still missing.

Who holds the ex-RDX XRD?

Gary went public demanding transparency on the XRD held by the former RDX entity, saying his patience has nearly run out and he's been trying to orchestrate a buyout. The community traced the old accounts on-chain — Jelthebest via Radixscan, lex with a new monitoring dashboard — and Og World estimates the holdings at roughly 800 million to 1.5 billion XRD.

THE BOTTOM LINE

REMEMBER THIS

The ex-RDX token transparency row reignited loudly, while the stuck hUSDC remains fully mapped — 360,851 tokens across 79 accounts — but unpaid until Hyperlane releases the collateral.

NEXT WEEK

Watch for: Gary's promised update after contacting the ex-RDX parties, and any movement from Hyperlane on the stuck collateral.

Does the asset-oriented design pay off?

Felix K asked whether Radix's asset-oriented execution layer really beats a simple VM like Ethereum's, suggesting it shifts risk into the execution layer itself. Azel | genesisclown.xrd replied the design worked as intended but an update 'left the keys in front of the door', unnoticed by developer and auditor alike; projectShift and Blind5ight weighed the…

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

“Can old node-hosting relationships be revived so app builders don’t have to run their own node and gateway?”

Daffy wasn’t sure, but pointed to coming improvements — including the Lean edition gateway on a 1 TB disk — and said a hosting partner offering node-as-a-service would be very welcome.

DEBATE OF THE WEEK — WHAT TO DO WITH EX-RDX TOKENS

ONE SIDE

Buy out or burn the former entity’s large holdings so the project can finally move past the uncertainty and secrecy.

THE OTHER

Swapping one large holder for another changes nothing; a gradual, broad redistribution would be fairer for everyone.

FROM THE DEV ROOM

Daffy reported a 40% drop in mainnet node storage costs thanks to validator-led optimization, and is targeting a 'Lean edition' gateway that fits a node plus gateway on a single 1 TB disk — though a hosting partner to run these as a service is still missing.
