What the room was really talking about

COMMUNITY MOOD

4/10

Previously: the subsidy had just wound down, AI agents were emerging as the killer-app thread, and the community was waiting on the RadixPlanet fee change, more MCP demos and clarity on the wallet update pipeline.

A heavy week that started with real shipping — Astrolescent's Fable upgrade, RadixScan's beefier MCP server, Ascent's NFT launch — and slid into a draining, multi-day argument about the RAC's remit, wallet ownership, open source and whether the community can hold itself together long enough for Xi'an. Builder energy is real, but so is the fatigue.

WHAT THE ROOM TALKED ABOUT

Fable ships, RadixScan levels up

Timan rolled out Astrolescent V4's Fable router, replacing brute-force queries with a token graph and native DEX simulation, while Michael upgraded the ai.Radixscan.io MCP server with pool-state analysis and better transaction decoding. Vlad B pushed on blueprint deployment support and learned it's still read-ish.

AI agents and the x402 fee question

Daffy showed 125 subintents settling in one tx as an agentic-payment demo; flighttothefox pushed back that batching that wide will be far more expensive under sharding, and later argued Radix already beats Tempo on micropayment fees today. The room is split between 'ship the demo now' and 'wait for Xi'an economics'.

RAC remit fight goes public

Phil Gibson spent two days pressing projectShift on transparency, individual accountability and the RAC Telegram channel; projectShift said most RAC work is privileged and bounded, and that ownership of Peachy-era channels can only be given up by Peachy. The argument ended without a clear resolution.

Wallet has no home

Tadkis and Phil Gibson reopened the wallet-update vacuum from last week; Ghenadie confirmed he's still the maintenance point-person with more bandwidth from July, while Vlad floated a parallel community fork and flighttothefox warned wallets aren't something to 'vibe code'. No owner has been named.

THE BOTTOM LINE

REMEMBER THIS

Real product shipped all week (Fable, RadixScan MCP, Ascent badges, ASCENT graduation, the World Cup faucet), but the bigger story was a two-day fight over what the RAC actually does before the DAO activates — and nobody won it.

NEXT WEEK

Watch for: the RAC's next individual-byline update, Ghenadie's wallet-maintenance bandwidth returning in July, and the first concrete signals on the Strategic Council RFC.

From the council & the crowd

What the tracked voices said, and the week's best exchanges.

COUNCIL & INSIDER WATCH

The RAC came under sustained pressure to publish individual updates, open a new community-facing channel and clarify its pre-DAO remit. projectShift acknowledged that posts had been going out anonymously and pledged individual attribution going forward, while holding the line that most RAC work is legally privileged and that channel ownership sits with Peachy.

projectShift RAC

Defended the RAC's narrow legal/administrative focus against demands for broader activism, confirmed individual-byline updates going forward, and flagged finding Permanent RAC candidates as the real existential worry once the DAO activates.

"I personally don't give two shits on common sense. What's needed is good sense, wisdom."

flightofthefox HYPERSCALE DEVELOPER

Argued across subintent batching, micropayment fees, wallet strategy and open source that Radix's real problem is cost-per-compute and the looming market-maker expiry, not infrastructure narratives.

"Closing source isn't a moat, it's just a guarantee to not be taken seriously in this industry."

Phil Gibson COMMUNITY CONTRIBUTOR

Filed a Strategic Council RFC proposing paid Leads for product, marketing and partnerships, and kept pushing the RAC on accountability and wallet ownership all week.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

"Who is currently taking care of the Radix wallet software and its future development?"

Tadkis said the Foundation handed wallet decisions to the community and the RAC can only facilitate; Ghenadie confirmed he remains the maintenance point-person, with more bandwidth from July for bug fixes and QoL.

ASKED BY PHIL GIBSON · ANSWERED BY TADKIS

DEBATE OF THE WEEK — HOW WIDE SHOULD THE RAC'S REMIT BE?

ONE SIDE

Phil Gibson argues the RAC must actively drive wallet transitions, individual accountability and a new community-facing channel because that's its primary interface role.

THE OTHER

projectShift and Dezza hold that the RAC's job is narrow legal/administrative DAO setup, most real work is attorney-client privileged, and visible individual output is a poor measure of contribution.

Still open — expect a rematch.

FROM THE DEV ROOM

The dev-adjacent conversation this week was flightofthefox warning that a 125-subintent batch is the worst-case sharding scenario on Xi'an, and that the cheaper path is many narrow txs each touching a couple of shards — a useful mental model for any agentic-payment builder.

HEARD IN THE ROOM

“Radix is not trying to be where everything runs. Radix is trying to be where authority lives.”

— GARY

“Until Radix builds that kind of digital internet café, a finished and unique destination, all the infrastructure optimization will not trigger anything.”

— KARL TONG

“The onboarding model is broken in web 3. Make a bank account to use our app — it's crazy if you think about it.”

— VLAD B

THE PULSE

The mood: Builders keep shipping real things — routers, MCP servers, NFT drops, onchain games — but the room is exhausted and increasingly impatient with the RAC's pace, the wallet vacuum and the ticking market-maker clock.

JARGON, DECODED

x402 — An emerging standard for machine-to-machine micropayments on the open web that AI agents are expected to use to pay publishers fractions of a cent.

Apache 2.0 — A permissive open-source licence — the one Hyperscale's Rust Xi'an implementation is committed to, which means anyone can fork or extend it.

Transition RAC vs Permanent RAC — The current five elected members steer the Foundation-to-community handover until a DAO company activates; after that, a new RAC is elected under the Governance
